News In Brief

SAC PROCEEDS GO TO STUDENT CENTRE

On Monday November the 13th, SAC held a mini-golf tournament in The Meeting Place.
The proceeds will go towards the proposed Student Centre at Erindale College, in response to the challenge issued by the Because Club of Erindale. The challenge proposed by the Because Club was for any other student organization to raise an equal or greater amount of money to go towards the Student Centre. The Because Club hosted the Tribal Son concert on Friday, the first of many fund-raising events planned by the club.

TEDDY BEAR BREAKTHROUGH

The Public Relations department at Erindale is selling Teddy Bears in order to raise money for the Breakthrough Campaign. The Breakthrough Campaign was established to raise money for the Management Sciences Centre which Erindale hopes to build in the future.

ERINDALE LIBRARY THEFTS ON THE RISE

The Erindale library has experienced an increasing number of thefts this year of student property. The thefts can be explored more thoroughly in this week's Guest Column.
Students are urged to keep any briefcases, bags, or valuables within eyesight as often as possible and to try and avoid leaving their jackets or purses draped over the back of their chairs if they intend on leaving their seats for any length of time.

"UP WITH PEOPLE"

International Organization seeks Erindale students

By John Philips

Up With People, a unique International Organization based on giving young people the opportunity for a cross-cultural education, is accepting applications from Erindale College students beginning this week.

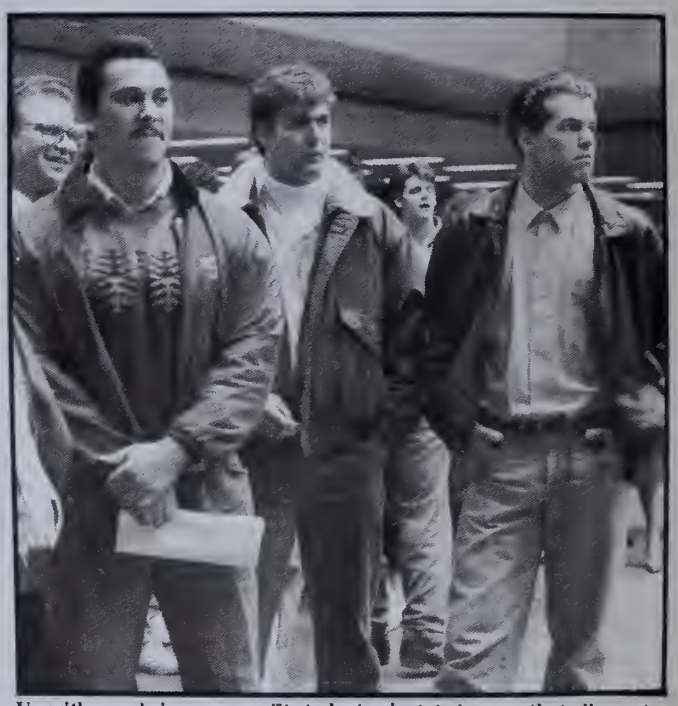
Up With People is an organization aimed at building the understanding of the peoples of the world, therefore creating a more peaceful planet.

Each year they select 640 positions from 8 000 applicants, based on maturity, personality, motivation and interest.

The 640 youths, aged 18-26, consist of individuals from 25 countries, and compose an international cast that musically expresses the hopes, dreams, and concerns of young people to many different people and countries.

On Wednesday, November 15th and Wednesday November 22nd, Up With People will have representatives at Erindale College at the Career Centre's Information Days.

Admissions from Erindale Students will be accepted for the programs beginning July 1991 and January 1991.



Up with people is a non-profit student orientated group that allows students the opportunity to express their concerns to others along with youths from around the world. The group will be accepting applications from Erindale students this week and next week.

No More Liquor at Erindale's Spigel Hall

By Bart Amodeo

Spiegel Hall will continue to sell only beer and wine at its special events, even though its liquor licence allows it to sell mixed drinks as well. The administration believes that this restriction will reduce the likelihood of students becoming intoxicated there.

The college reaffirmed this unwritten policy in the course of informal discussions between the Principal and Vice-Principal at the beginning of this school year.

In explaining the policy, Dean Silcox, Vice-Principal of Student Services, said that "the administration believed that it was easier to become drunk when drinking mixed drinks than beer." Silcox also cited the "obvious" need to visit the washroom more frequently when drinking beer than spirits, and believed that a beer could not be consumed as quickly as a mixed drink.

Silcox went on to say that while he was "not in favour of a completely dry campus, it must be remembered that Spiegel Hall is only a temporary pub, and that a full service bar is available at the Blind Duck Pub."

"Students must learn to handle alcohol, and must also learn to pace themselves."

"When I was 18 or 19, I was still learning to drink alcohol," the Dean explained. He said that the restriction could be relaxed for special occasions, such as formal dinners, where "obvious controls" exist on people's drinking.

ECSU President, Perry Meeker, feels that a full service bar should be available for all events in Spiegel Hall, for the simple reason that some people just don't like beer. Meeker rejected the idea that some people could become intoxicated more quickly on mixed drinks, citing that U of T's alcohol policy requires that all servings of alcohol, whether they are beer, wine, or spirits, contain the same amount of alcohol. He said that he would be sending the administration a letter requesting a full service bar at upcoming events.

Dean Silcox for one would probably be at least somewhat receptive to this suggestion, for when asked his personal preferences, he said "I definitely prefer bitters to beer."

There will no longer be anything other than beer for sale at any of the events hosted by Spiegel Hall. The new legislation has recieved some objections, however, and will be an issue to contend with in the future.

Amnesty International rallies against the death penalty

Erindale students lend their support to the movement

By Jim Sicksay

The Erindale branch of the world-wide Amnesty International organization recently lent its support to a rally objecting to countries that still support and uphold the death penalty. The rally, held downtown on the weekend of November the 4th and 5th, focused specifically on the allowance of 20 countries supporting the death penalty to have their consulates based in Toronto.

Hosted by David Broadfoot, the rally marks a year long campaign by Amnesty International against the death penalty. Speaker Corners gave individuals a chance to learn more about the horrors of the death penalty, while petitions were signed to aid in the abolition of the practise in the future. A petition signed by hundreds of Erindale students was also submitted to the City.

Mayor Art Eggleton and other Canadian Celebrities were among those who signed the petitions.

"Amnesty is an organization that I've supported and worked with over the number of years that I have been the major of Toronto," said Eggleton.

The main concerns that Amnesty has over the death penalty is the violence it creates in society. China, Cuba, Grenada, India, Jamaica, Korea, and America are all afflicted by this violence.

"It brings a violent end to many innocent victims," said an Amnesty International representative. "In Florida, Delbert Tibbs was sentenced to hang for the rape and murder of a young woman, a crime he did not commit."

"He was tried by an all white jury, and spent two years in a 5 x 7 cell on death row before he was set free on appeal."

Besides the risk of killing innocents, the death penalty also serves no real purpose, said Paul Bentley, President of the English-speaking section of the Canadian Amnesty International.

"More than 40 000 people in the world, from retarded people to 14 year-olds to 75 year-olds, have been executed in the world over the past 10 years," said Bentley. "Yet the death penalty has been proven to have no effect on the crime rate."

Erindale's branch of the Amnesty International Group recently lent their full support to the downtown rally against the death penalty. The International organizatioin is objecting to the death penalty still being allowed in over 20 countries around the world, despite the cruelty that the death penalty entails.

"Unfortunately, 60% of Canadians believe in the death-penalty. We, as an organization, feel that they must therefore ask themselves one very important question: "Is human life a fundamental right?"

Erindale members were scarce at the rally, but Jyotika Malhotra, Director of Amnesty International at Erindale College, was proud to be there. "Bravo, all those who showed up," she said.

"But those of you who weren't there, you missed your chance to make a difference."Anyone interested in Amnesty International should contact the Erindale Branch of their organization in the ECSU Club Directory.

Erindale changes cirriculum for 1990/ 1991 academic year

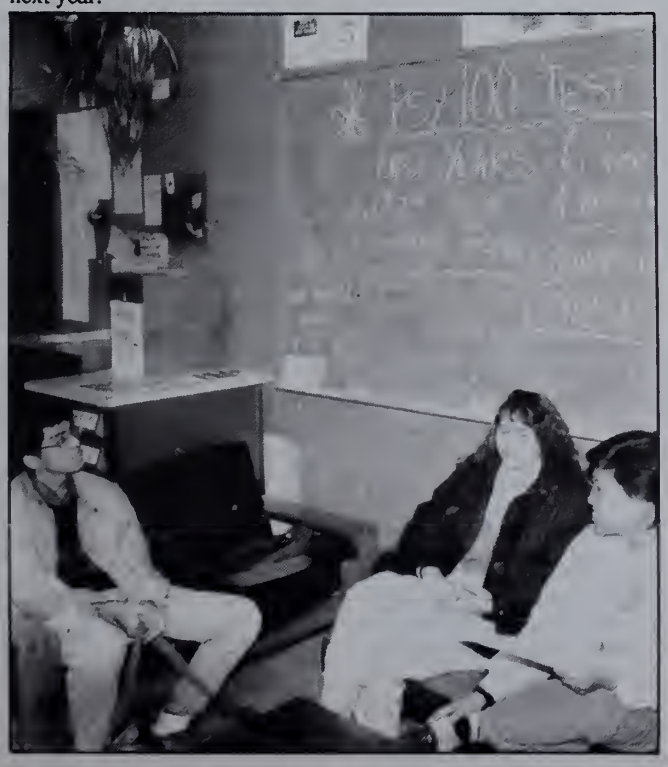
By Steve Reiners

Erindale College's Course Calender will be experiencing some significant changes to courses offered by several of its Departments in the 1990/1991 Academic Year. In the Report of the Academic Affairs Committee presented to the Erindale College Council on November 2nd, Professor T.G. Elliot presented to the Council cirriculum changes recomended by the Academic Affairs Committee for the 1990/ 1991 academic year.

Mathematics will be adding a new Calculus course, MAT 112Y, which will apparently begin where MAT 105Y currently begins and end where MAT 132Y presently leaves off. There was some debate as to the high-school prerequisites for the new course, but it was decided that these would be straightened out before next fall.

Psychology has approved, by a narrow margin at the sub-committee meeting, that a limitation be placed on the admissions to its Specialist and Major programs. It appears that PSY 100 marks create a very little obstacle to students wishing to enrol in a Psychology Major or Specialist program, and admissions to them will therefore be restricted either by Department or the Fire Marshall. The limitations will be further discussed in the future.

The Committee will meet throughout the year to discuss further changes for the academia next year.



The Psychology Department is one of the Academic Disciplines most affected by the changes in the Erindale Cirriculum for the next academic year. Under the new proposals, there will now be limits on the number of students admitted to the Major and Specialist programs in Psychology.

Sex with Sue

Q107's Sue Joehenson is being brought to the college by the residence dons on November 29th to discuss sexual matters with students at the college. Sue Joehenson gives sexual advise on a number of Radio stations throughout the country who broadcast in conjunction with Q 107.

According to Emma Uganecz, Phase I Don, the residence centre has decided to present Sue to the students for several reasons. "She seemed to be quite popular among the students," said Uganecz," and really seemed to want to come when we asked." "She wanted to speak before Christmas, because that's the time when most college pregnancys occur."

Examining our Campus Police

Whenever there is a problem at the university, the explanation is always the same — underfunding. Money seems to be the explanation for all the ills we are experiencing.

Class size, library hours, extended shuttle bus services, our Student Centre, and the Campus Police all seem to be held at the mercy of funding problems.

This, however, has not stopped students, staff, and faculty from attempting (and reaching many of their goals) to solve our own problems.

John Hamilton, a fourth year Commerce and Economics student, raised over $300 of student money in less than two weeks by asking students to give spare change to the building of the proposed student centre — both medium II and ECSU supported John in his endeavours.

The Because Club has challenged all other clubs to donate as much as they will to the student centre, and SAC Erindale held a mini-golf tournament this Monday with all proceeds going to the student centre.

Even the faculty and staff have donated over $80 000 of their own money to be put towards the building.

These efforts are a clear illustration that students, staff, and faculty can work together to solve some of the college's problems. It shows that when students are made aware of the difficulties they will work together, in whatever capacity, to give whatever help they can — the phenomenal success of the Because Clubs's fund-raising event on Friday evening is a marvellous illustration of this fact.

And, when the student centre is built, it will be much more of an achievement when it can reflect the sweat of students, staff, and faculty.

But, there are other problems on campus that seem to be beyond such solutions. medium II's files show that there has been an ever-present dissatisfaction with the Campus Police.

And, there seems to be no inherent reason for this hostility since Western, York, and other universities are generally satisfied with the job of their police forces.

The problem is that, as a group, the Campus Police are extremely irrational — with students they are insistent while when there is trouble they call in the "real" police.

An illustration of their behaviour is last week when they walked into a student organization's office in the Crossroads Building after 6 p.m. insisting that they move one of the two cars parked in the reserved parking lot outside of the building (for which permission was granted) because they didn't show a sticker. He thought that only a limited number of individuals could park there and that it would be selfish to use the spot if you didn't have a sticker.

Last year the same group of officers argued that there was a need for guns on campus. And, last Thursday, a guy and girl were wrestling in the mud by the road near the third phase parking lot when the Campus Police passed right by with their windows up — they had just finished inspecting the parking lot for illegally parked vehicles.

It is such incidents that cause the Campus Police to loose respect. This is not to say, however, that they are all unreasonable and irrational.

There are at least a few examples of outstanding work performed by the Campus Police. But, until they, as a group, make an effort to change their outlook and attitudes, there will continue to be problems with the Campus Police — and it is doubtful that student/police relations will be any different from what it was ten years ago.

A gang of thieves taking control of the library

Mark Cassar
Guest Columnist

Just about anyone that has attended Erindale College has ventured to use the library facilities in the South Building. It is next to impossible to succeed in this institution without spending at least sometime studying in this library. It is also customary to leave one's spot, whether it be a couch, table or stall to grab a drink or simply take a break. In doing so, we often leave our books, jackets etc. behind to save our spots or to avoid logging everything around. At the very least, we assume that we return, everything will be exactly the way we left it. Wrong assumption.

Take for example Monday November 6, 1989. Returning to a stall on the second floor with a friend, we were shocked to see that her briefcase was missing. After a desperate search of the area, we managed to find her briefcase three isles down, emptied of all its contents. Missing were two history text books worth about $60.00, a couple of high-lighters and her U of T pocket calendar containing personal information such as her name, address, phone number and S.I.N. number. Besides now having to repurchase her text books (which were ironically needed for a test the next day), she realized that who ever took her belongings, also knows everything about her. This thought would not please anyone to say the least. But one thing puzzles me; if this was a theft per se, why was the briefcase itself not taken and the calendar book discarded instead of the other way around?

We immediately reported this to the Campus Police. We spoke to P. C. Helewa who informed us of some very interesting things. He mentioned that their success rate in solving thefts is about 3%. Not a comforting thought but in all fairness to the nature of the crime, the usual lack of evidence and witnesses does not give them much to go on. Secondly, if the individual(s) is caught, he emphasized that "charges are laid to the fullest extent."

He also noted that last week alone, there were 10 thefts reported from the library, most of them being purses, wallets or briefcases.

All of this was very interesting but did little to console my friend who was, to say the least, a little disturbed by such a stupid and cowardly crime. When I asked P.C. Helewa what was being done about all this, he told me that the Erindale police have "undercover personnel monitoring the activities of the students, particularly on the second floor." He told us that the Campus Police believer that an "organized ring of individuals are responsible for many of the thefts in the library."

When I asked a couple of the library personnel about the reported thefts and this "ring", I was sympathetically told that the "police were handling it." In any event, nothing has seemed to curtail these thefts. I also managed to learn about another theft on that very same Monday. A female student reported that her purse, containing her money, all identification and home address and number, was taken when she left her chair for a few moments. Again, there were no witnesses or any evidence or any kind. As for the Campus Police, all they can do is wait for something to turn up.

Apart from the general frustration of having to replace all that is taken, both of these victims must endure the fact that whoever was responsible for these acts of idiocy, has all their personal information that could be used against them. The predicament of being a victim does not seem to end with the theft. It very well could progress into something worse.

Campus Police

- Guest column continued from page four -

As for the rest of us who have not experienced the theft of personal belongings form the library, we can only feel that no one can be trusted and that leaving our things behind for even a few minutes can prove to be a mistake.

This one hit too close to home to be ignored. The message from the Campus Police is clear. "If you leave your belongings unattended, you are asking for trouble."

As for the individual(s) responsible for the thefts on Monday or any other day, congratulations!! We hope you are impressed with your accomplishments because no-one else is.

Closing Erindale?

John W. Clarke

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

In the on going debate over which one of the university of Toronto's seven collages are considered "superior" to the others, one must wonder if the name Erindale finds it's way into the conversations of the academic elite when the topic of collage superiority is discussed.

In the November 21, 1978 issue of Medium II it was reported that a rumor was circulating in certain circles that Erindale Collage might be shut down as a result of declining enrollment in Ontario universities. Issuing a response as to the validity of these claims, then University of Toronto President James Ham had some words for those who doubted the superiority of Erindale.

"Eridale should continue to become a distinctive, lively place which would continue to show the old lady on St. George Street how things can be done better", James Ham said in an address at the first fall convocation, the first to be held by Erindale.

Maybe, just maybe we could classify Erindale as a "distinct society" allowing ourselves the rights and privileges of a distinct society over the other University of Toronto collages?

President Had had some final words for those who doubt.

"Anyone who thinks Erindale Collage is about to close has a hole in their head. Erindale is a fine, viable collage in the midst of the fastest growing community in Ontario!"

All those who doubt, take note.

Work with the Campus Police

Dear Editor,

Your editorial and previous articles on the security of Erindale College since the sexual assault concern me.

In the past two or three years when the existence of inadequate parking facilities was a problem, medium II and many students (especially those in residence) accused the Campus Police of lack of enforcement. Now we have a problem with female safety and we're complaining about the Campus Police spending too much time writing tickets.

Administrative action is heavily influenced by student opinion. We as students are to blame as much as anyone else for what occurs on campus and if what has happened is a result of inaction, then it is the inaction of students as well. This community is comprised of staff, faculty and students and we are all responsible to it.

It seems the understaffing of the Campus Police is a problem — if so, then let's work toward convincing the administration that more are needed. Why not start using the student voice in a constructive w3ay and drop the shoddy criticism.

Next year we might have students injured in a fire on cam pus because fire trucks could not pass illegally parked vehicles. Why? Because this year we are saying the Campus Police are spending too much time handing out parking tickets.

Help set a record

Dear Editor,

I received this memo at work and wanted to pass it on to the student at Erindale.

The staff at the Centre have learned of a little boy wanting a last wish. Craig Shergold of England is a 7 year old boy who is dying of Cancer. Craig's last wish is to have his name in the Guiness Book of Records for receiving the most Get Well Cards.

We, the staff of the Centre, have sent our cards of well wishes and hope that you too will want to help make his wish come true.

If you are interested please send your cards to:

Lets show Craig that the student s of Erindale College care!

Thanks, Hi Fraser

Supoport the Erindale Football team

Dear E.I.C.

The Erindale Football Team beat St. Mike's this weekend (19:7), which means that they are now in the Division I final, the Mulock Cup. Anyone does not show up to support the Warriors at Varsity Stadium next weekend is a complete stick-in-the-mud and should live in exile for the rest of the year - right, Norm, dude?

An upset reader

Dear Editor,

I wrote in a few weeks ago complimenting your paper on what I consider to be an outstanding Arts section. To my dismay, this letter is not as positive as was the last one. I do not consider myself to be a sports enthusiast, but I do know the basics of the major sports. I read the last Sports section and discovered that on page fourteen, Das Boot and Tony Biscuit (use your real names) wrote a sentence that was over five hundred words in length. The Sports section is truly one of the worst-written sections that I have ever read in my life. My only question is why people continue to read such a trashy section when they could culture themselves by reading the Arts section. The article on restoration in the Arts section in the last issue by Anna Porczynski was simply outstanding.

Yours truly,
Simon Flemingwood

Erindale faces problems with large enrolment increases and little funding from the downtown pocketbooks

By Norman Saunders

The Erindale College student population has increased substantially since last year. Enrolment this year is up 5 800 from 5 300 last year.

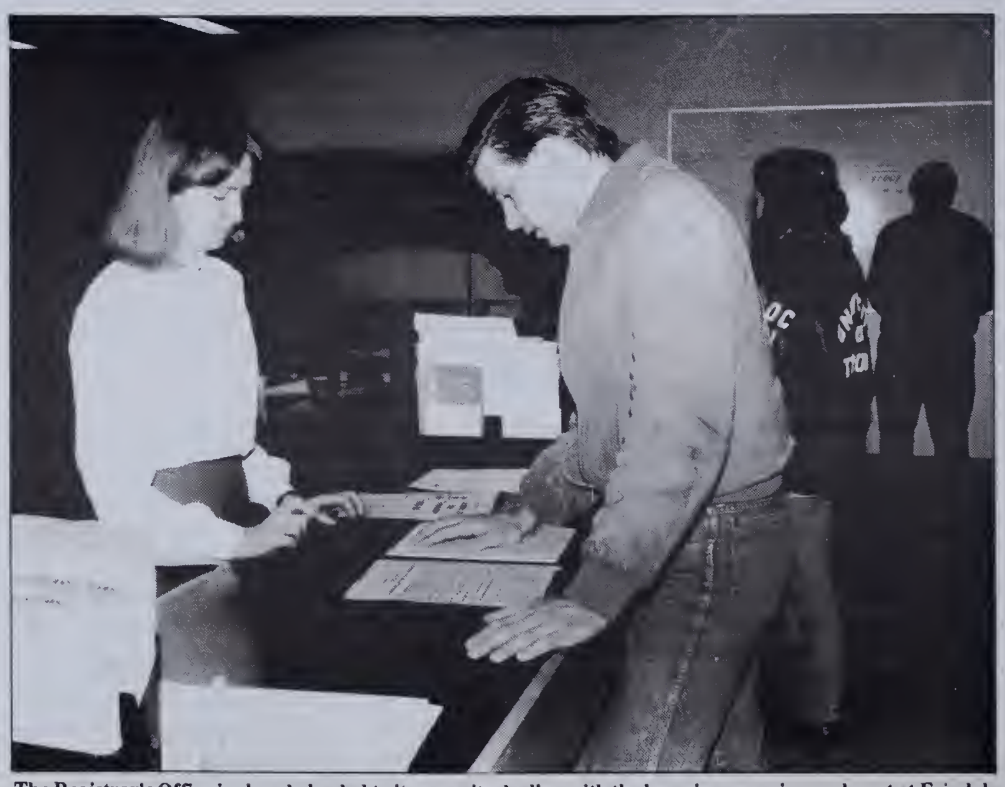
The trend is part of the university of Toronto's efforts to increase enrolment so as to qualify for the provincial governments increase funding (per student).

The provincial government has made this move in an effort to make Ontario universities accessible to the increasing number of grade 13 students seeking a post-secondary education.

The provost of the university was down to speak to Erindale College on the Budget. She said that most of the many for the increased allotment per student will go into the university's base budget.

Erindale will receive one dollar for every $14 that the university receives through the extra funding.

The provost said that the college will have to use the money to decide how it will take care of the pressures from increased enrolment.



The Registrar's Office is already loaded to its capacity dealing with the large increases in enrolment at Erindale this year. Even more students are expected next year, however, and the College is now facing the dilema of what do do about the increases in enrolment.

According to Professor Elmer, who spoke of the subject in the November 2nd meeting of the Erindale College Council, there are several options the College is considering inorder to adapt to the large enrolment increases that Erindale will soon be experiencing."We could possibly adjust the research/teaching loads of some of the classes at Erindale, giving students and teachers different allocations of class/research times," said Elmer.

"More teaching committment may also be asked of Erindale's professors.They could possibly teach two and a half courses instead of two and so on."Elmer also suggested letting the class sizes grow in accordance with the increase in student population, although space is already limited in many classrooms around campus and the library is packed to near its capacity.

Because Club'sTribal Son concert a success

Club event also raises money for the Student Centre

By John Philips

Tribal Son played to an almost capacity crowd at the Blind Duck last Friday night. The concert was put on by the Because Club and the event was a complete success. The group played songs from U2, the Clash, as well as a number of their own songs.

The crowd started filling up the Duck around 9:30 and the place was nearly full within the hour.

"Everyone had a really good time," said Darrin Griffiths, Sports Editor of the medium II.

Tribal Son was sponsored by The Because Club in an effort to raise money for the new Student Centre proposal, and to challenge other clubs to raise equal or greater amounts of money than the Because Club for the Centre.

Judging from the crowd, the Because Club has created a formidable task for any club to match, and their donation to the Centre should be quite good.

"We were very pleased with the turnout," said Cindy Lee, Vice-President of the Because Club.

Their challenge remains open to all Erindale student societies.

Tribal Son was a great success on Friday night. What's more, the event ,helped to raise funds to put towards the Robert Prichard Student Centre.

Erindale prepares to celebrate its 25th Birthday
Committee is established to plan for the big event

By Paul Paradine

Erindale College has begun to plan for the upcoming 25th anniversary celebration that will commemorate the establishment of the College as an official member of the University of Toronto.

Although the celebration is still some time away, the planning of such an event must be a thoughtful and meticulous process.

According to Holly Benson, Director of Public Relations at Erindale, they have therefore already begun to plan the event.

"We have established a committee chaired by Professor Robinson, composed of a number of the faculty and staff of Erindale College," said Benson. "But we're looking for students to sit on the committee as well."

"We're also looking for suggestions from individuals as to what we can do to celebrate the anniversary of Erindale College. However, we would like suggestions that people are willing to sponsor themselves, or at least help in their organization."

Benson says that although the celebration is still in its formative stages, there has been lots of enthusiasm expressed, and lots of hopeful plans for the anniversary.

There was at first some dispute as to exactly when the anniversary would be held, however."It all depends on what year you consider Erindale to have been established," said Benson.

"Erindale was approved by the University of Toronto in 1964, hired its professors in 1965, and held its first classes at T.L. Kennedy Secondary School in 1966 until the actual college was built."

"The classes moved into Erindale in 1967," said Benson, but we decided to celebrate in 1991 instead."

"Erindale is a young college, but we've made our mark," said Benson. "We have lots to celebrate."

"We also hope to get the Erindale Alumni involved," said Benson. "We're sure they would like to have some imput into this, their College's 25th birthday."

"Hopefully, if we get everyone working together, it will be very enjoyable indeed."

With the planning going into the 25th anniversary celebration, this at least is certain.

Dribble Dribble

Has anyone out there been to the new mall on Erin Mills Parkway lately?

No? Well you're lucky then, because I've never seen a more useless construct in my entire life. Have you ever noticed how the bigger and better something is made out to be, the less likely it is to have the shopping goodies you're looking for?

I hate going to a mall that looks like it was designed by Sergio or Alberto. The place is big on looks, and poor on quality. Reminds me of this column.

The mall has lots of completely useless stores, dealing in every type of trendy shit available to the throngs of Yuppydom, but fails to hold any stores of interest. Just take a look at the stores of Queen Street and compare them to this new mall. Everything on Queen street is dirty and loose, but it is alive and interesting. The Erin Mills Town Centre is so sterile I would expect the Glad Man to live there. Actually, I saw him playing mini-golf there the other day with his white hair sticking out of hole number 16.

I feel like if I touch anything in these stores, I would be attacked by someone out of a Jiffy Cloth commercial.

Anyway, you get the point.

Its just like restaurants. Ever notice how you can spend a fortune on expensive food at some places and feel like you've just eaten a wafer thin mint, whereas you can go to little diner places downtown and get a homecooked meal with lots of food for a cheaper price?

I don't know about this image crap. Probably why I hate trends so much.

But who cares anyway? I think I'll just stuff my morals and go out for $35 of Chinese.

A wacky tour of E

A budding young real estate agent shows Erindale College to wealthy Japanese buyers. After purchasing the R

By Chris Ovsenny

Did you know Erindale has two Olympic size swimming pools? The world's second largest freestanding structure? Miss Nude Canada enrolled as a student? A nuclear powered generating plant that threatens to go off like Chernoybl, reducing us all to nuclear ash?

Actually, none of the aforementioned is true, but there are many interesting aspects to our fine campus someof which you probably don't know about, so read on MacDuff!

Erindale campus has approximately 5800 students enrolled and is proportionately the largest campus at U of T. The campus offers most of the wide range of studies that St. George campus offers, plus its own specialized programs such as Survey Science, and an Art and Art history programme run with SheridanCollege, as well as specialized independent studies courses.

Erindale also offers a learning centre, three fine cafeterias (ok, ok one good, one ok, and one with a name that often matches the colour of their food), an excellent library, a bookstore, etc.

Enough with the textbook outline schtick... ERINDALE IS THE BEST CAMPUS ON U OF T and we all know it! (Singing Erindale once, Erindale twice, holy jumping....)

Whoa! Just a brief flash of school spirit there. But seriously now, Erindale is one of the most respected and outstanding campuses in the University. On with the tour.

South Building: Level 0000 -- This level is the athletic level, containing the gyms, rec centre, lockers and weight room.

Level 1000 -- is often known as the "psyche dungeons". A somewhat disorganised maze of classrooms typifies this level. Room 1004 is interesting, as it only has three-quarters of a wall. What's inside? Climb up and take a look...

Room 1025 has a 'caution -radiation' sign on it, but acting principle Roger Beck assures us, "We're not dosing the college with rays that they're not supposed to have... Industrial safety is something we are very aware of." Room 1042 has a curious item in front of it - a liquid nitrogen pump, complete with instructions and everything. We assume it is turned off, but if you want revenge for that low grade on your term paper, invite your prof. down and you can play 'let's make a deal'!

Level 2000 -- The busiest level at Erindale, it contains the meeting place, library, lecture halls and the Greenery.

Level 3000 -- This level is comprised predominantly of chemistry and geology labs as well as the parking office (as opposed to the no-parking office?) and the ever-famous principle's office.

Level 4000 -- More science classes, plus — at no extra charge -- a plethora of flies breeding in every window! That's right folks! (perhaps to obtain a biological type atmosphere?) The level also features the graduate student lounge.

Level 5000 -- The roof which also has a greenhouse on it, which is visible from the middle parking lot. The rumours of late night term paper sacrifices to the marking gods on this level are completely untrue.

The five minute walk-- actually "the five minute 'walk-really-quick' walk".

The crossroads building -- is a small two level jobby for Commerce classes and offices as well as ECSU headquarters.

The Blind Duck -- is a good student pub in which many a studcnt has spent hours doing in-depth research . Great atmosphere, particularly on pub night.

The Tuck Shop -- This is the campus' version of a variety/grocery store.

The North Building- contains the majority of the Arts classrooms. Many of the club HQ's and department offices are here. It also has an interesting black sculpture, although as to what it is, no one is quite sure.

The North Building was originally meant to be a "temporary structure" which had a "temporary addition" to it, giving us the building we have today.

U of T Research Area/Nature Preserve- Located across from the North Building, this path provides one with a break from the every-day concrete world. The scenic route runs along the Credit River valley and features an outstanding round meadow surrounded by forestry (a great place for peace and quiet, if one can find it...). Many deer and other wildlife can be spotted along the path and throughout the area. It connects up to the corn patch which is just up Mississauga Road, which happens to be the land the campus is selling to help realize the funds for our Breakthrough campaign. The path leads to...

Principle's House -- Also know as Lislehurst, the grand old stone structure was built in 1885 and remodelled in the 1920's. The house is on expansive well kept grounds, in which the acting principle and his wife live in. It also is the place where many banquets and alumni receptions are held. If you haven't seen Lislehurst it's a definite must see.

The Rock Lab -- also known as 'the moon lab' due to the fact it housed the first rocks back from the moon, is located on the road to the principal's house. The lab has an illuminated moon crescent outside it that looks like 'Mac Tonight on-a-stick'.

Artist's Cottage -- is located further along the Principal's road. It is a small 'shack' in which Erindale used to have a famous author stay in residence.

The Central Utilities Plant -- is the pale cement building pumping fumes into the air. The plant supplies heat and cooling (Isn't it always at the wrong time?) to Erindale except for the North building, which is independently serviced. Cooling is done efficiently through the use of the giant water tower.

Colman Place -- The original house was built before the college was founded, Coleman Place is now used for the residence center and conference offices. It also contains Erindale's radio station CFRE.

The residence buildings -- "Rez." Enough said.

One might ask what's in store for Erindale in the future, and the final jeopardy answer is...

Lislehurst: This majestic mansion was built in 1885 and remodelled in the 1920's. A beautiful starter home, just $2 000 000.

You could even go with your initial impulse - that is, to punch the offender in the nose. This is guaranteed to extinguish any possibility of further civil conversation between the two of you, but at least you can call yourself a patriot - right?

I personally do not adopt any of these approaches. Don't get me wrong; I do honestly believe that Erindale is the greatest U of T college, and I would never dream of apologizing for belonging here, but I also would never strike anybody just because he is ignorant of its fine points.

Rather, my usual course of action is to explain why it is a privilege to be associated with Erindale. There are so many wonderful things about Erindale! For starters, there's its breathtaking beauty, its airy spaciousness, its intimate classes, its wild parties....

Usually, when someone from the downtown campus hears this, his expression changes to one of genuine interest rather than blind patronage. He realizes he has been naive to hold a prejudiced attitude toward something he knows little about.

I urge the individual to attend some of Erindale's many fine events, such as a Pub Night or a Spigel Hall bash. If he agrees, then it's clinched.

One more uneducated student broadens his horizons; another one bites the dust.

A Glass of Water
by Darlene Domagala

Frederick was not going to ask for the glass of water.

He had his suspicions that they had forgotten it on purpose. This way they would have an excuse not to keep refilling it. They were too interested in each other's clothing to be concerned for his welfare. One glass of water. They knew his throat got dry, terribly dry and especially in such a smoke filled room. Well, he would not ask for it, shouldn't have to really so they could chatter about nonsense all night for all he cared.

"Hey Pop, Julie's making the dressing according to Ma's old recipe. She's determined that her's will be even better than Ma's. I don't think that's possible, do you?"

Frederick's head shot up. He narrowed his steel blue eyes and peered speculatively around him. The voice was faint, hollow sounding but he could still hear every word. He was positive it was Frank talking. Why, it had to be Frank; this was Frank's house so why else would Frank's wife be making the turkey's dressing if she wasn't in her own home. He finally spotted Frank, sitting in the opposite corner drinking a beer. Frank's losing even more hair than Billy, Frederick mused to himself, and gaining more weight too. Well, his sons couldn't blame him for their hair loss. He still had a full head of hair that still needed to be trimmed once a month. They must have gotten it from Clara's side. He watched Frank nod at him and then smile. Of course Frank could smile, he had something to drink. Frederick looked away from his eldest child.

Frank had panelled the entire living room. Did a pretty good job too, Frederick had to admit, except for the choice of wood. Pine was too light for this room, should have used a darker stain maybe. That Julie probably forced Frank to make such a foolish choice. He had warned Frank not to marry her. Her skirts were too short. He had told both of them just that, right to their faces—had to make a clean slate of things. Frank had never listened, even as a child.

He shifted in his chair. The chair's wood, he was sure, had splintered and was now poking his back. And he wearing his good beige sweater too. Frank had not given him much time to dress. He was glad he had sent this sweater down to the laundry just the week before. The administrators had not told him he was going out for the holiday. He had fully expected to spend Thanksgiving in his room. He hadn't gone out at Christmas. Frank and Billy had come to see him. Frank had brought that stupid little plastic tree and a beige sweater wrapped in bright green paper. He had given them five ten dollar bills, one for each of his grand children. Ten dollars was not much but children nowadays were much too spoiled although his own grandchildren were not a bad lot.

Frederick bent his grey haired head over to examine his socks. Good, they were both beige. He felt more comfortable knowing that his clothes matched from head to toe. He didn't think clothes were so important that they warranted being a topic of conversation but it did a person good to know that he was at least presentable. He coughed. It was a dry, rough sound. There was an acidic taste in his mouth. If only he could get up and get a glass of water himself. These damn rocking chairs weren't meant for a body, young or old, to get out of without some problem. Maybe Billy would help him. Billy was a good lad, not headstrong like Frank.

"Where's Billy?" Frederick asked aloud. How anyone could hear him was beyond Frederick. There were twenty people chattering away and the television on no less. The young ones were nearby, right in front of the television. Billy's Gerald was almost eight. Surely he could fetch his grandfather a glass of water.

"Gerald," Frederick called, his voice sounding very raspy and weak. The boy looked at him quizzically, brows knit over pale green eyes. Why, the boy has Clara's eyes, Frederick thought incredulously. Why on earth had he not noticed before?

Gerald eyed his grandfather warily. He looked around him. No one had seemed to notice his grandfather speaking. He searched the room for his father but Billy was nowhere in sight.

Frederick pulled his wiry frame to the end of his chair. He began to rock back and forth. he steadied the moving chair and reached over to where his polished cane leaned against the wall. Grasping it tightly, he hoisted himself up slowly. A flash of pain streaked up his spine and Frederick grimaced. He pulled himself up to his full height and breathed deeply. He was sure he could make the few steps to Gerald without any help. He did not want any help. At least not from anyone in this room. Gerald would get him some water. Gerald was a fine young man with his grandma's eyes. Frederick to a tentative step forward, feet sinking into the plush beige carpet.

Gerald stared intensely at his grandfather. His two younger cousins got up quickly and moved away from the television as their grandfather approached, Gerald knew he should move also, his mother had told him to do so if anything like this were to happen. But Gerald could not move, he was rooted to the carpet, transfixed on the tall, frail figure slouching towards him.

Suddenly Gerald was snatched from in front of the television. Frederick stopped and beheld the spot upon which his grandchild has once sat and now did not. He shook his head and stared at the carpet. Had Gerald really been there at all?

"I thought you were going to watch him?" a shrill, female voice cried. Frederick looked confusedly around him. It had become very quiet. All eyes in the room were on him. Frederick stepped back. Who were they to stare at him? They were all a bunch of unmannerly and overpriviledged children. They should show more respect to their elders than to sit and stare like that.

"Billy and I just went out back for a minute," a male voice rang out. "For Christ sake Julie, he just got up and walked around a bit. What harm is there in that?"

"Frank, he was approaching the children," the same female voice responded in an agitated manner.

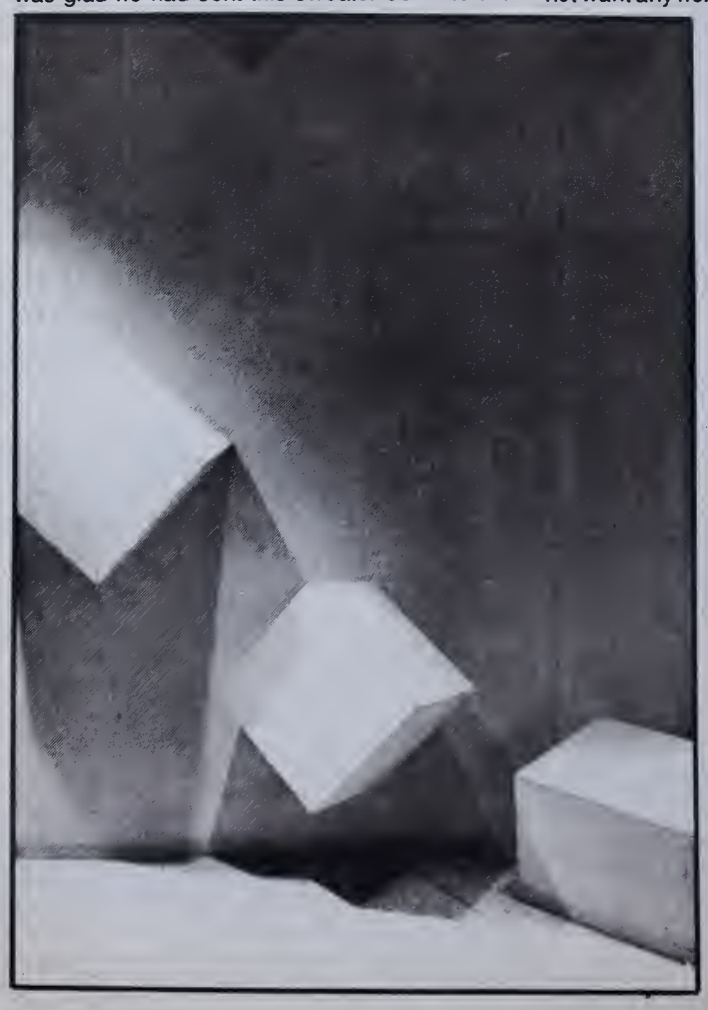
"Would you be quiet. He's not deaf, you know. Anyway, he would never hurt the children. What happened last year was an accident," the male voice reasoned softly.

"He kicked your daughter down the stairs, or don't you remember the fourteen stitches it took to close the cut on her forehead?" the female voice hissed.

"He didn't mean to. She crawled behind him and grabbed his pant leg. He didn't even have his glasses on. You know that."

Julie turned to face Frederick. Frederick saw hatred in her eyes, and had to step back in response to its strength. Frederick was confused. He wanted to speak, to set them straight, but his mouth was too dry. He hadn't ever been here last year. He had been out at the home. Frank had brought him that little tree. Young people never remembered things correctly. Frederick slowly make his way back to his chair. He remembered Frank never had a good memory, even in grade school. That Julie was probably no better. Well, he had told them not to get married. He gently lowered himself back into the chair, his knee bone snapping loudly in the silence. The chair began to rock slowly. It was still quiet in the room. All that senseless jabbering had tuckered them out. It would do them good to rest their mouths a bit. Maybe not they could really concentrate on the true meaning of Thanksgiving and forget about their clothes.

Frederick sighed and then coughed deeply, spittle flying from his mouth. He glanced at the table beside him. He should have known better, there was still no glass of water.



Rainshower
by Lisa Bendall

I've been through many storms before,
But something sets this one apart.
I feel that this is something more,
A quiver deep within my heart.
There's something growing, bit by bit,
It's prelude to a weather change;
I don't know what to think of it,
For something's just a little strange.
The warning signs are all the same,
But no one's stopped to take their pause.
It seems I'm staying in the game,
And this alone defies the laws.
It's not too late, I know that now;
There's shelter, should I choose to run.
But maybe time has taught me how
To wait the storm out for the sun.

The Moonlight Redemption
by Ronnie Brown

Swiff...swiff...swiff...swiff.

The perpetual blades of reality pierce into the dance of the black shadows, on a feeble mind.

"...I heard this story one thousand times before...you can't change...it's all YOUR fault...stop being an emotional crutch for you...someone has to be there for me... it's all YOUR fault...can't breathe anymore...have to leave...it's all YOUR fault...suffocating me...who am I anymore...it's all YOUR fault...I want to leave...

"...please, don't leave me..."

"...don't hold me anymore...no understanding...it's all YOUR fault..let me free...you're not going anywhere...it's all YOUR fault...strangling us...don't know...it's all YOUR fault...never listen...who are you anymore...drowning...spinning...it's all YOUR fault...failing...hating...it's all YOUR fault..."

"...don't go..."

"...IT'S ALL YOUR FAULT...IT'S ALL YOUR FAULT..."

I hate the darkness, yet in darkness I am one. The darkness is my connubial veil. I despise, so darkness shields me from the exterior of living and the unconscious state of pain. In the darkness I can be one with the blades slicing dead air. I can navigate the edge of the blade until, with the release of breath I let the motion cast me onto the path of the next. I will be skived into layers. I will walk in the shadows, in the valley of death, but never with them.

In darkness, the longer I wait, the more I wonder and hate the dual role of my apparent purpose. Can I play the executioner and not feel passion as the condemned? Will I parish without breathing remorse as my last guide? The darkness lulls me into comfort. The rhythm of the blades cradles me into the motion of a march. I want to be the master of the blades. I want to sacrifice my soul, my thoughts, my body to the blades. I want to be, for evermore, draped in the darkness...swiff...swiff...swiff

"...it's all YOUR..."

"WHO IS IT!!!", my god, the tinge of sweat is bitter. So bitter. My heart is escalating faster than I can pace the rug. Something is wrong with the darkness, it's too muddled, like it was being suffocated by a pillow. Over on the other side of the room, the perpetrator, the moonlight, raped my world.

The floorboards creak with every step, their age becoming louder each year. The building is dilapidated by the unconcern for beauty. It sticks out in the block, forever tormented by the spray can rebellion. To live here is to suffer the intrusion of those who hate just about as much as I do. The fuckin' blind won't stay down. It infuriates me to hate in the first place but when inanimate objects defy me I hate everything even more. Who the fuck makes these blinds that never stay the fuck down when you pull them. And how come every old building has these fuckin' blinds on the window! And who the hell is that sitting on the street corner in the middle of the night?

"HEY...HEY YOU..." even this bastard is ignoring me. "ASSHOLE...WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU DOING?" still no reply. This jerk is sitting on the corner in the middle of the night and won't respond to my prodding. As if this nobody has the right to sit in my neighbourhood and not give a shit to answer me. As if he can ignore everything around him and pretend he is above himself with dignity to answer me. For all I know he may be staking the place to pillage it at a wink of the eye. Well if he thinks he can get away from answering to me, he has another thing coming to him.

I can't believe how cold it is getting at night. In fact this feels way too cold for this time of year. And here I come upon this idiot sitting on the corner, drawing of all things, in a fuckin' T-shirt!

"Hey, isn't it a little cold to be drawing in a T-shirt?"

"No"

Well, that was a real ice breaker. I find myself at a loss to say something.

"Don't you find it hard to draw at night?"

"You can't draw the universe behind the curtain of day."

I can't believe it. One moment ago I wanted to rip this...this guy's head off and now the jerk has me in his control.

"Listen asshole, how come you didn't answer to me a minute ago when I was yelling at you!"

"You seemed hostile."

I seemed hostile did I. This asshole won't look me in the eye and he wonders why i feel fuckin' hostile. Hostile? I'll show him hostile...

"Are you in pain?"

He has me snared, in the night, lured out of my darkness, he has me snared.

"Let me draw you, it may relieve you a little."

I want to scream no and knock everything over, but I can't. His voice is too soothing. I wish I could stop him, break his head and kick it down the street.

"Yes..."

In my darkness, my lair, he has joined me. An old man looking for something to draw while his brittle bones warm up. I still can't see his eyes, but it doesn't matter, for in the darkness, I control the image. I sit, in my corner like a pugilist waiting for the sound, the opportunity to battle his opponent. The old man takes no heed in the darkness, funny, he seems to be accustomed to the surroundings.

"Would you be so kind to sit in the light by the window?"

"No. I thought you could draw in the dark. Thought you said you could see better?"

"I don't believe I ever mentioned sight. The universe through the stars shine their features at night, you do not shine, therefore I require some form of light."

Out of sheer boredom I sat by the window, squint-eyed by the annoying moonlight, waiting and trying to follow the first stroke of his hand on a canvas that seemed to be glowing. His hand, trembling with fear, started to come down...

"AHHHHH!!!" the blades began whirling at an incredible pace. "What are you doing to meee!!!"

"SIT DOWN AND REMAIN STILL!" his voice like thunder rumbled across the blades, shattering the forged steel of time.

"Leave me alone, you're tearing me in two. It was my..."

"SHUT YOUR MOUTH!!!" he cried, half in rage, half in pain. I am being drained. I can't yell anymore, I never have felt such pain before. The old man is suffering too.

"Why are you doing this to us?" I ask through a haze of black tears. He continues to draw, every detail, as I can only imagine. He takes time and bends it, he becomes one with the drawing, and he suffers through his tears from black sockets of a bottomless soul.

"Why are you doing this to us?" I cry once more.

"Because my child, it was never all your fault."

A stream of daylight embraced me and carried me away. For the first time, in a long time, I was in my livingroom in the day. I didn't feel hate today and I have a funny feeling I won't feel it tomorrow. The ceiling fan is busted, maybe I need a new toggle switch.

In the middle of the floor I discover a dull grey canvas, the drawing. Running hard, the floorboards squealing with life I look at the drawing. Never will I feel horror as intense as I felt it now. Glaring at me, in the crimson red of dried life, was my death mask. Depleted of sight, of sound, of passion, it was finally free from the nightmare evermore.

Save For Her Beauty
by Sean Plummer

Save for her beauty, nature ne'er expressed
Fortune so great as her eyes seemingly hold,
Or upon those lips promise quite so bold
Silhouetted reason, the darkening so supressed
Never did I see love as purposed,
Caught upon a second, a minute's fold;
Eternity stopped in ice, yet not so cold,
Belongs to the world, one world caressed.
Then a thought o'erlakes the silent air,
Revolution roused by curiosities rebel pause;
Freedom from fear instills a subtle strength,
And here truth announces her careful care;
To trangress no pronouncement of loving's laws
And reconcile our life to each days length.

Warriors defeat St. Mikes to advance to finals

by C. Wanschura

The Warriors proved on Sunday that they have the talent to win it all this year. They convincingly beat their downtown rivals, SMC, on our own home turf in front of a respectful sized audience.

The first half Erindale draw first blood on their second possession as Andrew White orchestrated successful back to back plays with Wayne Solomon, Jason Whale, and Dave Pearson who eventually completed the series in the end zone. The only unfortunate incident of the first half was when linebacker Elio Riccio was ejected from the game for what the ref called objectionable conduct. As coach Gerry McDermott later stated, "the game would be a lot better if only the referees would call it properly and let the players play the game." The Warriors did however manage to receive fewer needless penalties and this seemed to fuel their energy. SMC managed to score a touchdown within the last minute of the half on a long pass to close the gap and leave the score 7-6 for the Warriors at the half.

In the second half the Warriors visibly and physically dominated their opponents, more defensively that offensively, but did manage to rally for twelve more points. The White-Taufic Saliba combination answered SMC's previous long TD play by duplicating it and performing it better as "Aardvark" showed that tall players can run as well as catch as they combined for an 80 yard play. Taufic dedicated the touchdown to Lisa from Saskatchewan. When Taufic returned to the bench and was asked about the touchdown, his only comment was "did I look?" Their next touchdown came as a result of a missed field goal attempt and recovery in the end zone, this one courtesy of Steve Horniak.

The rest of the game was a defensive gem as one ball after another was intercepted and SMC's runners were stood up and knocked down. Jim McMahon snagged a minimum of three passes and of course was penalized for one of them for unsportsmanlike conduct (it seems you are not allowed to enjoy yourself in this game). Veteran Chris Melidonitis made a sprawling catch on a low throw. Afterwards Chris was quoted as saying, "not bade for an old out-of-shape player, this was my best game by far." The last few minutes saw Erindale run the clock down as they kept possession to finish it off. I'll have to apologize to any other players I forgot to mention, but you all played an excellent game.

The Warriors capitalized on a number of St. Mike's errors and won the game decelsively.

Barring any unforeseen circumstances, the Warriors will be battling it out for the Mulock Cup next Sunday at the Varsity Stadium against the winner of this weeks' Meds/Vic-Physed game at 12 p.m.

It seems like it is going to be a University Football Fan weekend with the Vanier Cup one day and the Mulock Cup the next. The Warriors hope to get as much support as possible to cheer them on to victory.

Waterpolo Preview

by Charlie Tuna

That's right waterpolo fans (all three of you)! . Just when you thought it was safe to go in the pool! Waterpolo is back!

The returning team this year will be lead by the U.S. veteran, the six time gold medal winner, the crusty 42 year old, Mark Spitz. Spitz mentions, "I decided I could make a comeback, and aim for Barcelona in 1992. Then I thought which university has the best waterpolo team. Unfortunately, they turned me down, so I came to Erindale."

The team last year was entirely composed of green rookies, except for this year's coach\ team leader, Chris "Aquaman" Bard. However, this year the team is now gritty veterans - lots of oat bran will do that to you. Many of the returning members, such as Jason "Float like an inner tube, sting like a fish" Schuy and Jeff "Horhe!" Smith, as well as Steve "Yah, I have a beard - so what?" and Chris "Johnson 340 outboard" Ovsenny have been bulking up over the summer, so look for a dominant team this year.

Last year the team went 3-4-1 (W-L-T) , but look for the beginning of a Dynasty (or possibly a Dallas) this year.

The team this year wishes to avoid the same steroid abuse allegations that they faced last year. League scout Das Boot indicated that Erindale should be one of the top two teams this year.

Swim practices begin in December, and Team strategy practices begin in early January.

Any one wishing to join is welcome. Sign up at the athletic office and watch the board for bulletins.

Men's Soccer team loses close game to the Meds

by Jack Strop

The incredible potential of this year's Men's Division I soccer team has gone to waste.

Due to injuries and poor team attendance, the season ended on a dismal note with Erindale losing to Meds 2-1.

Erindale lost 2-1 in a bizarre match played downtown.

As usual Erindale could only produce the necessary eleven players with the aid of the division II team.

We've had trouble getting players in the past, but never have we lost so many players during the game.

Tension began to erupt when Erindale's captain was yellow carded early in the match.

The Meds team were more than grateful for the referee's unusual (to say it nicely) calls. Meds, however, could not score on the determined Erindale squad.

The first half ended with a frustrated Erindale club.

Erindale knew they could beat the Meds team but it would take two uncalled-for red cards to fire up the Erindale team.

Sam "Don't flash that card at me" Ishandar and Tony "Please don't point at me, it's terribly impolite" Vultec were unprofessionally carded and thrown out of the game.

Erindale, mad as hell, scoredtheir first goal with a precision shot by Julio Rodriguez.

The goal was called back due to an offside call.

Erindale were enraged, so enraged that they scored another goal which the referee had to allow. Erindale led the game 1-0.

Down two men, the Erindale squad continue their relentless pursuit of goals.

But it was not be due to the backline confusion between Tony Zekl and Julio Rodriguez.

Meds pounced on the ball and fired a long shot into the Erindale net.

The game ended in a 1-1 tie. A dark cloud flashed across the field and several moons quickly appeared as a vehicle's horn echoed in the darkness.

So ends another season for the Erindale Division I Men's soccer team.

Remember all you soccer fans that the Men's Division II soccer team is still in the thick of it. Good luck division II.

Erindale defeats Scarborough for championship

by Mona Jones

Home field advantage meant nothing to the Erindale Women as they shut out the defending champions, Scarborough College, by a score of 8-0. Erindale was the underdog in this women's flag football championship. The game was played on Tuesday, November 7th at 7:30 a.m. against Scarborough at Scarborough.

The tempo of the game began at 6:00 a.m. when coach Tony "Heckle" Zekl started the Erindale van at the Erindale parking lot. The girls all piled into the van at 6:05 a.m. and this is when the women began to get pumped up. Much to the disappointment of the Scarborough coach who insisted the game be played at Scarborough, the Erindale women decided the only way to "show him" was to beat them.

Arriving at the field at 6:45 a.m., the Erindale women piled out of the van one by one to face the cold, damp weather. With the first whistle, captains of both teams were called for the flip at centre field. The result was Erindale kicking to the Scarborough ladies. On their first return, Scarborough gained 25 yards on some beautifully executed hand offs to three different players. They then proceeded downfield gaining several yards at a time and obtaining several first downs. At the Erindale 30, Mona "But I was falling, ref" Jones was charged with a pass interference resulting in a 15-yard penalty. With the ball at the Erindale 15 yard line, Erindale's defense was excellent asthey held Scarborough to the third down in which the Scarborough women decided to kick the ball to try for the end zone one point conversion. The kick was short as it landed into the arms of Jones, who ran it down field to our own 20 yard line.

The Erindale's offense was carefully executed as they moved downfield. Erindale quarterback Jones threw several short passes to shortback Nancy "Candy Hearts" Raymond, running back Amy "Walkman" Gil and Kim "Quit the attitude, Les" Sutherland. Erindale continued to move downfield with passes going to Bessie "I can't believe it. We won!" Anastopolous and Lynda "O.K. you guys" Bedard.

However, Scarborough's getting frustrated due to the tight defensive playing by Mina "What comes after five steamboats" Gil and Leslie "We need plays" Trounce, Scarborough had a hard time moving down the field. On a third and seven, Scarborough decided to throw and it was intercepted by Maria "F!*@! you babe!" Kappos who ran for the 45 yard touchdown. Erindale reinforced the lead with a conversion pass from Mona "It was the ultimate sweatbands" Jones to Lynda "Shit, I gotta go downtown now!" Bedard. From here on, the Erindale women were pumped up and they deserved the win despite travelling across Toronto. Quote of the day goes to Christina Teung: "Could we hurry and get back to Erindale, 'cause I have to study for my April exams!"

Congratulations women on a great season and a great comeback.

The girls of the team would like to thank Tony for all his efforts.

The women played a conservative game and this disrupted the Scarborough team.

Coach Al makes changes

by Peter Lemoine

"She was a dull person but a sensational invitation to make babies," Kurt Vonnegut jr. in Slaughterhouse Five.

The division III hockey team suffered only its second loss of the season last week. Coach Al's squad has yet to settle into a groove and therefore has been unable to create any offensive momentum.

Like the girl in Vonnegut's story, the team appears to be unimpressive, but a longer look suggests that there is in fact an underlying proficiency.

The old coach must somehow find a way to encourage the boys to transform this talent from its present latent form to a more conscious manifestation of its potential.

To this end Al has made two specific efforts, the first is a much more stringent regimen at practice, including exhausting skating drills and repetitive passing drills aimed at creating at least a foundation in the basic hockey skills.

The practices have managed to to maintain an air of friendly competitiveness with each player eagerly awaiting his turn to knock their illustrious mentor through the end boards, a feat easily accomplished, even by fleet one hundred and fifty pound centres.

The other effort which the management has undertaken to establish a winning tradition is in the area of recruitment. Realizing the need for size and strength, they located two graduates of Michael Power High School (we all know what that means), woke them at 6:00 a.m. on Wednesday morning and hauled them off into practice.

Before they could realize what they were getting into they had been signed, and Erindale had close to four hundred and fifty pounds of new talent and there was no turning back.

These endeavours, when paired with Stompin' Mike Karda's new skates, should signal a new era in Erindale hockey. The bus for fans and players alike leaves the South Building at 6:00 p.m. every Sunday night. Editor's Note: Two members of the Erindale student population correctly stated that there were 534 words in last week's mega-sentence concerning the medium II and ESCu football game.

Division II season ends

by Gayle Pinto and Marina Colautti

Yes, we know, the burning question on your minds last week was "Where the hell is that Pinto/Colautti soccer article?" Well, sorry about that.

We seemed to have missed our deadline! Nevertheless, we're here to update you on the final standing of the Women's Division II soccer team.

The last time you heard from us, we had won our last game of normal season play against St. Mike's and we were unsure as to whether or not we would proceed to the playoffs.

The good news is, we did! On Monday Oct. 30 Division II faced a tough New College team.

The game turned out to be one of our most exciting with strong aggressive play that threatened this first place team.

By the end of standard game time, the score was still tied at 0-0, resulting in overtime five-minute halves. Unfortunately, New College scored at the end of the first half off a rebound on a corner kick.

Erindale was not able to make this deficit.

And so there you have it folks, thus putting an end to another season of Division II soccer.

We would like to thank all our players, Robin, Helen, Mindy, Anita, Brenda, Vanya, Phyllis, Bessie, Jacinta and Anna—and our two favourite coaches Tony and Hami for their participation.

Erindale destroys Law

by Rupi Badwal

Last Monday night, the Men's Divisional I basketball team improved their record to four wins against one loss. Erindale earned their fourth win by defeating Law 69-49.

In the first five minutes, Erindale struggled to keep up with Law.

When Erindale warmed up, however, the could not be stopped. At half time Erindale led 37-28 with only six players and no coach. Although Law, who had ten players, tried to outrun Erindale but this strategy backfired.

In the second half Erindale gained momentum, led by Mike Peshko's shooting, Chris Morgan's rebounding and Sean K's foul shooting.

The game exemplified the true character of the team. They played excellent defence and dominated both the offensive and defensive boards in the second half.

This is arguably one of the best [illegible] sion I basketball teams Erindale has produced, gifted with height (seven players over six feet tall) and quickness with four superior guards.

Women win field hockey championship

by Rekha Trembath and Allison Tyrrell

Erindale's field hockey team trampled through their season leaving a path of mutilated opposition pleading for mercy. With our strong will, we ignored the cries of Law/Med/Nurses, Vic and SMC. In our regular season of six games, we remained undefeated with a record of 4-0-2, having no goals scored against us (Mona, sorry for the lack of excitement.).

Unhindered, we drove on to claim our spot in the playoffs. The championship was in our grasp. We could smell victory. (This time it wasn't Rekha's cleats.) Our championship title for the third year in a row had to be upheld.

The Final Game was November 9, 1989 7:30 am, on the North Field. The whistle blew and the game was underway. Erindale was hot onto the ball, dominating the play, thanks to an extraordinary effort from our forwards - Martha Glancy, Jackie Newman, Terri Ryam, Kim Sutherland, Belinda Eames, Jennifer Powell, Patti Malone, Leslie Trounce and Allison Tyrrell and our halfbacks - Holly Lucas, Elaine Nakamura, Rekha Trembath and Carla Webster.

Within the first ten minutes, Erindale increased the pressure upfield against the opposition and was awarded a short corner (penalty).

The play that followed was prerehearsed and perfected in practise under the careful scrutiny of our coach II, Wess DeSouza.

This play, a combined team effort, resulted in our winning goal. Allison, with unsurpassed grace and precision, was responsible for driving the ball into the net.

In the second half, Vic bounced back to challenge us, but not hard enough to outwit our solid de fence-the fullbacks: Sue Lavel, Prabh Sinota, Lynda Bedard and our... "unique" goalie, Mona Jones.

To entertain Mona, we permitted Vic to have the odd shot. She handled it rather well. (Mona, we are debating whether or not to try it again next year!)

Sue Rose, our faithful water carrier... Wasn't she our coach? Yeah. We can't forget your effort and support each morning at practices and games. You pushed our team to greatness. But today, we really deserved our doughnuts and juice.

The women's field hockey team won its third consecutive championship this past week.

Touch Football

by D. Scoop

And then there were four...It has taken just about two months to trim the Men's Intramural Touch Football League down to a slim, lean four team machine. Of the four, only one can be considered a surprise. I am talking about the Freedom Fighters, a team of free agents who just may be the only free agent team ever to advance to the final four in the history of intramural sports.

The Freedom Fighters disposed of the Coldcuts by a score of 30-18 in what was a highly offensive affair. The Freedom Fighters were once again led by Dion Farentino who not only scored one touchdown but also passed for four more. Also scoring for the Fighters were Aaron Polesky, Stan O'Brien, Vic Krampel, and Adeeb Khawja. Responding for the Coldcuts were Mike Difillipo, Guy Salisbury, and Mike "Parks and Rec" Trigiani.

The Freedom Fighters attained the privilege to face the first-place Timberwolves this Wednesday (Nov. 15) at 12:00 p.m. on the South Field.

As much as the medium II hates to side against the Cinderella team, it was decided that the Timberwolves are a few players better than the Freedom Fighters. In their last meeting, the Wolves won 22-16. Both teams have improved since then, but the results will stay the same. Take the Wolves by 7.

In the other quarter-final game, the much-favoured Silent Revenge covered the ten-point spread by crushing the Should-Be-Grads 22-6. Once again, the Revenge had virtually no trouble controlling the ball on offense, moving at will up and down the field.

Quarterback David Doorey hit Dave Ryckman, Anthony Petrucci, and Jason Suh for the Revenge's majors, and used Darrin Griffiths' chest as target practice in the end zone.

Scoring the lone major for the "guys who should have graduated by now" was Dominec Falcone.

The Revenge now advances to meet the Orange Crush in semifinal action this week (game timeis tentative).

These two teams have never met this year, however many of the Crush played for the Pyschadelic Budgies last year, who lost 21-20 to the Revenge in the 88' final.

Take the Revenge by three in the semi-final.
